Mary's expertise is in both broadcast and wireless regulation, providing a depth of knowledge to her clients. Representing clients in Washington DC for more than 25 years, she understands the need to be constantly aware of the changing regulatory landscape at the Federal Communications Commission, and keeps her clients abreast of relevant changes.

Today, Mary works with clients both large and small including individual broadcast licensees, national broadcast companies, Internet service providers, emerging wireless entities and trade associations. She advises clients on regulatory matters, business transactions and current policy issues. Mary got her start in the telecommunications industry representing "wireless cable" companies in the 90's and has now emerged as one of the leading experts in the field of 2.5 GHz spectrum. She is the "go to" person for all things related to the Educational Broadband Service and Broadband Radio Service.
