Ariel joins WBK's Denver office following her graduation from the University of Colorado Law School in Boulder, Colorado. Ariel practices at the intersection of law, energy, and business as an associate in the transactional group. Her approach is informed by her varied prior experiences of government, in-house, and private practice internships.

During her time at CU law, Ariel served as the Editor-in-Chief for the Colorado Environmental Law Journal, conducted research on tribal language revitalization, tribal intellectual property rights, and on tribal energy management. Prior to law school, she earned her bachelor's degree in International Relations from Tufts University.

Ariel enjoys spending time hiking, skiing and climbing, as well as cooking.
