Clients turn to David for help with a variety of regulatory issues before the FCC, particularly for his expertise on media regulation and accessibility issues impacting individuals with disabilities. He is a regular speaker at communications conferences and industry events and has written numerous articles on FCC issues.

Over more than 20 years, David has coordinated the purchase and sale of numerous radio and television stations, and has helped industry associations, broadcasters, educational institutions and others participate in FCC auctions and other regulatory proceedings, such as those related to broadcast ownership, Section 214 assignments, and spectrum allocations. David also advises telecommunications companies on issues related to Telecommunications Relay Services (TRS) for the deaf and hard of hearing, including Internet-based Video Relay Services (VRS) and IP Captioned Telephone Service (IP CTS), and otherwise helps clients with all of their FCC-related needs.
