Rachel practices at the intersection of emerging technology and consumer protection, including accessibility, data privacy, Internet of Things, robocalling, and unfair and deceptive practices. Whether compliance with FCC rules, state privacy laws, or FTC guidance, Rachel is her clients' go-to as they design their products and services in a changing regulatory and legal landscape – and seek rule changes or waivers to make their innovative products viable. Rachel also helps technology and media companies, carriers, and manufacturers comply with and develop FCC regulations related to disability access, hearing aid compatibility, equipment authorization, and RF exposure. In addition, she counsels clients on the clearance of trademarks and the prosecution of federal trademark applications. Having been an in-house attorney, she appreciates the pressures in-house counsel face and leverages her experience into exceptional client service.

Rachel serves as Chair of the WBK Women's Initiative, helping women at WBK achieve success, as they define it.
