Tyler Dillon joins WBK's Washington, D.C. office after graduating from the George Washington University Law School. During school, Tyler served on the Federal Communications Law Journal, where he focused his research on legislation relating to Section 230. He also worked for a law firm that specialized in telecommunications law and for a major phone carrier, as well as running his own business that provided public relations and research services to clients.

Prior to law school, Tyler ran a non-profit after working as a communications director for various organizations. He also served in AmeriCorps at the Food Bank of Iowa, where he designed and executed a plan to increase food assistance programs in underserved communities. Tyler received his B.A. from Northwestern University, where he majored in Political Science and double-minored in Economics and Religious Studies.
